

PSYCHOANALYTIC PERSPECTIVES: A JOURNAL OF INTEGRATION AND INNOVATION

CALL FOR PAPERS

About Psychoanalytic Perspectives

Psychoanalytic Perspectives encourages interplay between a wide range of psychoanalytic theories including relational, interpersonal, and intersubjective and the more delineated forms of traditional theory. Its pages provide an intellectually nurturing space for dialogue between emerging analysts and those who have preceded them. In the integrative spirit of our publisher, The National Institute for the Psychotherapies Training Institute and the N.I.P. Professional Association, the journal also includes writing by practitioners of other therapy modalities, such as body-centered, cognitive, family, and group therapies.

We welcome thought-provoking theoretical and clinical works exploring psychoanalysis. The editors of Psychoanalytic Perspectives also encourage contributions of poetry, short stories, essays, book, film and theatre reviews and memoirs relating to the psychoanalytic experience. Additionally, we include articles on practical issues of importance to the clinical community, such as nurturing a private practice in these challenging times. Beyond our support of the clinical and the creative, we are also committed to being a forum for connection and exchange on current matters of social concern. We welcome letters to the editors and commentaries on articles or other issues of importance to be considered for publication.

"Breaking down old barriers and disciplinary boundaries, fostering an openness of spirit and a fresh approach to original writing and creative theoretical integration, Psychoanalytic Perspectives sets a new tone for respectful conversation, psychoanalytic scholarship, interdisciplinary exchange, and professional education. A must-read for the contemporary student and clinician."

-- Lewis Aron, Ph.D.

"Psychoanalytic Perspectives manifests a unique and engagingly authentic personality that I expect will delight and enlighten its readers for years to come. The content selection, though far-ranging and diverse, is not arbitrary or capricious, but reflective of an innovative vision and deep sense of purpose that embraces psychoanalytic thinking, social consciousness, and creative expression."

-- Phillip Bromberg, Ph.D.

Information for Contributors

We are interested in articles that are innovative and creative, address controversial subjects, and compare different theoretical perspectives. We encourage work that reflects an emphasis on integration of clinical and theoretical material, of diverse analytic techniques, of various psychotherapeutic paradigms and of analytic with non-analytic techniques.

For more information or to submit a manuscript for blind peer review, please contact us at submissions@psychperspectives.com.